What is a Time Bank?

Time Banks record and reward the things we do to help our friends and neighbors with time credits, or Time Dollars, a non-taxable, complimentary currency weaving our traditions of independence and social networking. It's like barn raising for the computer age, a local currency of cooperation and mutual support. Some things are not about money: help at home, teaching skills, or making democracy work in our own neighborhoods. For those things, we need a different kind of labor, one not based on price but on our willingness to trust in community. It's your time. Make it count.
